Evaluating Municipal Hydrogen Fuel Cell Transit Alternatives.

While battery-electric buses dominate urban transit electrification dialogues, municipal transit authorities facing sub-zero winter temperatures must evaluate hydrogen fuel cell alternatives. Fuel cell buses offer superior operational range exceeding 450 kilometers without mid-day depot recharging cycles, mitigating auxiliary heating battery drain.

However, green hydrogen supply chains and cryogenic dispensing infrastructure introduce elevated capital expenditures and safety certification hurdles that require dedicated municipal hydrogen distribution hubs.